Plant Specimen

Kingston that he quite forgot it, but he goes again tomorrow. So very odd we should happen to meet! Well, Miss Woodhouse, is he like what you expected? What do you think of him? Do you think him so very plain??

him so very plain;
'He is very plain, undoubtedly;
nothing compared with his entire w
to expect much, and I did not expect could be so very clownish, so
him, I confess, a degree or tw
'To be sure,' said to markably plain; but that is it of gentility. 20 I had no right such; but I had no idea that he ithout air. I had imagined enteel as r repeatedly in en, that artin. At ted, well-uld be in you must Hartfield, bred men. I be a very company w feel tha thought now? struck by ness of voice which I such a fine ai 'Certainly, he 'Certainly, he and way of walking as Mr Kinghtley. It the difference plai enough. But Mr Knightley is so very fine a man!'

'Mr Knightley's air is so markably good that it is not fair compare Mr Martin with bind. You might not see one in a hundre with gentleman so plainly written as in Mr Knightley. But he is not the only gentleman you have been lately used to. What say you Mr Weston and Mr Elton? Compare Mr Martin with either them. Compare their manner of carrying themselves, of walking, speaking, of being silent. You must see the difference.'

